Electronic Data Interchange

○ EDI (Electronic Data Interchange)

EDI provides the computer-to-computer exchange between businesses of standard trading documents in an electronic format. This exchange typically takes place via the internet.

Within K8, EDI standardised documents can be transmitted and received electronically across sales, purchasing and accounts functions; without the need for manual intervention. This offers potential savings in time, accuracy, control and money by eliminating manual handling.

These standard documents include:

- Sales orders
- Sales order acknowledgements
- Dispatch/advice notes
- Sales invoices/credit notes
- Statements
- Remittance advices
- Purchase orders
- Purchase order acknowledgements
- Purchase invoices/credit notes

More and more businesses are asking, and are being asked by their suppliers and trading partners to adopt EDI processes due to the potential saving in time and money. Kerridge Commercial Systems has been providing effective EDI solutions to our customers for many years.

The processing of EDI invoices and credit notes, incorporate payment terms and settlement discounts and follows the process through to the point of invoice verification.

○ Getting started with EDI

Kerridge Commercial Systems partner with a number of EDI trading providers. They manage the translation of the K8 standard messages into the appropriate formats for other systems. Kerridge Commercial Systems will advise as to the trading partner solution that is most appropriate for given types of business, transaction volumes and document types.
